GRADUATE DIPLOMA IN MIDWIFERY

Midwifery is a woman-centred, practice-based discipline. Midwives work with women and their babies and families across the childbearing year – while a woman is pregnant, during her labour and baby's birth and in the early parenting time.

The Graduate Diploma in Midwifery, designed to prepare registered nurses to become midwives, is an online program with compulsory on campus workshop days and 12 months paid employment with a partnership hospital where women and midwives work together to achieve best health outcomes for women and their babies. The program is offered in partnership with health services – chiefly Hunter New England Health and North Sydney Central Coast Health.

Applicants must have a Bachelor of Nursing degree or equivalent, and be a registered nurse with the NSW Nurses and Midwives Board.

The applicant must also have well-developed interpersonal and teamwork skills, recent clinical experience working as a registered nurse, preferably in an acute medical – surgical environment. Compliance with Area Health Service employment requirements, including completion of a Criminal Record Check and a Prohibited Employment Declaration.

MASTER OF MIDWIFERY STUDIES

The Master of Midwifery Studies at the University of Newcastle offers a wide range of electives so that you can develop your knowledge and skill as a clinician, midwifery manager, scholar and critical reader of research.

This CSP (commonwealth supported place) program has no up-front fees. This program is offered online with some elective on-campus days. The program is organised into trimesters to allow busy midwives who have multiple roles and competing responsibilities to study at times suitable to them.

Applicants must be a Registered Midwife.
